Hello, Taylor

Two websites were built for Taylor'd Wraps. They're yours to look at, and nothing is asked.

From Chris, through Kenney · a small lab that builds things for friends · October 2026

We've never met. Kenney told us about your shop, and we got a little carried away. This is the short version.

Who we are, in three lines

- Chris W looks after websites and helpers for a few organisations around Kenney (the foundation, the retreats, a fellowship). The lab is called drasticstatic.
- We build showcases: real, working sites made as gifts, so a shop can see what's possible before deciding anything.
- You approve everything. If it ever goes further, every word and photo on it is yours to bless.

What was built, in two days

Site	What it does	Open it
🚗	THE CARPORT, the real-site candidate: a 3D van that wraps itself in colour-flip film while you orbit it; a booth that lays film on fifteen things, or your own photo; a counter that ends in a numbered ticket and a phone call	https://drasticstatic.github.io/taylordwraps-nextjs-preview/
🎪	THE CAR SHOW, the hand-built first version kept alive as an arcade: the original peel, a vinyl toolbox, three games, every draft, the lab's experiments	https://drasticstatic.github.io/taylordwraps-public-preview/

Both work on a phone. Both are demo photos until you share yours.

What it does not do, on purpose

- No payments, anywhere. The sites are hosted on GitHub Pages, which forbids stores. Commerce stays on taylordwraps.com.
- Everything is a reason to call. Every path ends at your number, not a checkout.
- Nothing is collected. No accounts, no tracking, no forms that go anywhere.
- It can be turned off with one message.

What's possible, if you ever want to work together

- Your real photos in the booth and the peel: the whole thing gets ten times better.
- Your words on every page, in your voice; a Bienvenidos page is already there for customers who prefer Spanish.
- Your own address on the front of it (taylordwraps.com, or a new one), when you want.
- A real storefront, off GitHub, only if you ever want one; we wrote down where it could live and what it would cost, with card data never touching our code.
- Nothing locks you in. If you ever leave your current store, there's a one-page note for that day too.

What it costs, and what we ask

Cost item	What it covers
Cost to you	nothing, now or later; it's a gift
Asked of you	nothing; look when you like
If you like it	tell Kenney, and we'll ask what to change
If you don't	tell Kenney, and it comes down the same day
If you want your photos in it	send them through Kenney, and watch what happens

If you ever want to give something back

- You don't have to. The gift is complete as it is.
- For the work itself (changes, a real site, the storefront one day), you'd pay Chris directly: the donate button is on his page, drasticstatic.github.io/resume.
- Chris gives a share of what he earns in service to The Holy Earth Foundation, Kenney's foundation. That is his own gift, made after the fact; a payment to him is not itself a donation to the foundation.
- And for your own shop: the same button can go on your site, so a happy customer can bless you beyond the invoice. It's already built; we'd just turn it on when you say so.

Keeping it alive, if it ever goes real

A gift is a moment; a website is a habit. If the showcase ever becomes your real site, here is what keeps it honest and sustainable:

Maintenance option	Included
Hosting	stays free on GitHub Pages; your own address costs about $12 a year
Small changes (a photo, a price, a line of text)	you send them through Kenney; we make them; no charge
Bigger work (a new section, a booking flow, a storefront off GitHub)	we write down what it is and what it would cost before anything is built; you say yes or no
If we ever can't	every file is yours, in plain text, with its history; any web person can pick it up in an afternoon
Our ask for the long run	keep the photos coming, and tell us when something feels off; that's the whole maintenance plan

That's it.

Open the links, poke the van, press the buttons. We hope it makes you smile.
